MYTHBUSTERS

- I. Jamie and Adam are engineers who test popular science myths to see if they are true - or could be true. They spend their time doing experiments and building models so they can find out if the science behind what people believe is correct or not.
- II. They wanted to test James Bond's exploding pen. Could a pen really make a big explosion like in the film? They filled a pen with a small amount of explosive and threw it into the air. Guess what? When it hit the ground, it made a big explosion. Obviously they didn't use a real person to throw the pen, but it did make a big hole - nearly two metres wide! Jamie said he was very surprised.
- III. They also decided to test some of the 'science' from the film Pirates of the Caribbean. They tested if a man can go down a sail on a boat from the top to the bottom using a long knife. They couldn't do this in the laboratory so they had to use a real boat. Adam told me that it did not work. The sail is too strong to cut easily. If you tried this, you would fall a long way!
- IV. Next, they tried to find out about another idea used in the film. If you cover one eye before you go into somewhere dark, can you see better? Jamie covered his eye, then tried to walk round objects in a dark room. He said this worked well. He could see much better. So some of the science in films is true - but not all of it!
- V. I asked the team if they enjoyed their work. They said that they loved it! They have a lot of fun, but they are serious scientists. They are all very good at Maths, Chemistry and Physics. And they still have a lot of myths to bust! Adam said they would research robots next. 'We want to see how clever they really are!' Instructions: Choose the best alternative according to the information in Text 2.

51. What do Jamie and Adam like testing?
- a) new ideas
 - b) things people believe
 - c) science from the past

The Art of Travel

The old saying ‘It’s better to travel than to arrive’ is usually understood as an attack on destinations rather than a positive statement about travel. Indeed, people are always complaining about the horrors of travelling: crowded airport, overbooked flights, cancelled and dirty trains. However, I believe there are some unusual pleasures in the journeys we make.

Take the aeroplane, for example. Few seconds in life are more exciting than those during take-off. Waiting at the beginning of a runway, we see familiar locations out of the plane window: grass, a road, and modern hotels - the Earth as we have always known it, where we make slow progress even by car. Then suddenly, accompanied by the controlled noise of the engines, we rise smoothly into the sky and a huge space opens up for us, where we can imagine new possibilities in our lives.

Trains are another wonderful environment. I love the atmosphere of half-empty carriages making their way across the countryside: enjoying the silence inside and the regular beat of the wheels against the track outside. A train journey can be like a dream, where we become involved in different thoughts and are able to recall distant memories. There’s nothing like a moving train to encourage the mind to perform properly. Thinking can even improve when parts of the mind are busy with other tasks, like listening to music or following a line of trees.

If we are attracted to air or train travel despite their disadvantages, it is perhaps because we feel that these experiences provide an important alternative to the habits and limitations of our ordinary world.

Instructions: Choose the best alternative according to the information in Text 3.

56. What is the writer's main purpose in writing the text?
- a) to agree with an accepted saying
 - b) to complain about modern transport
 - c) to explain his ideas about travelling
 - d) to describe an unusual train journey
57. What does the writer say about travelling by air?
- a) He finds the delay before take-off annoying.
 - b) He enjoys the feeling of freedom it gives.
 - c) He prefers it to driving, despite the time taken.
 - d) He wishes the engines were much quieter.
58. When the writer travels by train he likes to _____.
- a) spend much of the journey asleep
 - b) sit in a completely empty carriage
 - c) admire the countryside along the way
 - d) listen to the movement of the wheels
59. According to the writer, a train journey is good for us because it _____.
- a) encourages us to remember certain things
 - b) allows us to forget about our daily problems
 - c) lets our minds concentrate on a single idea
 - d) offers us the chance to be totally relaxed
60. Which of the following might the writer say?
- a) If we travelled less often, we would have better memories of our visits.
 - b) Unless the destination is unusual, it is not worth the effort of getting there.
 - c) Although modern travel is fast and easy, there are too many disadvantages.
 - d) Although journeys can be uncomfortable, they are beneficial to our lives.
